The Global Moderate ETF Strategy slightly underperformed its benchmark in 3Q25, posting a return of 4.57% compared to a 4.76% return for its style index.

Equity Positioning

The Strategy's overweight to equities helped overall performance as global equity markets delivered strong returns in 3Q25. The Strategy held an average weight of 51.3% (1.3ppt overweight) during the period. The equity sleeve underperformed the 7.62% return of its benchmark, the MSCI ACWI Index. The portfolio's allocation to US aerospace and defense stocks helped performance. This was more than offset by the overweight in US value and high dividend-paying stocks, defensive positioning, and underweight in US megacap growth stocks. The allocation to international high-quality stocks and underweight in China further detracted from performance.

Fixed-Income Positioning

The Strategy's underweight to fixed income helped overall performance, as bonds lagged equities during the quarter. The Strategy held an average weight of 43.5% (1.5ppt underweight) during the period. The fixed income sleeve slightly outperformed the 2.03% return of its benchmark, the Bloomberg US Aggregate Bond Index. The portfolio's overweight in mortgage-backed securities modestly contributed to performance, though this was offset by the underweight in investment-grade corporate bonds. The strategy was underweight cash, holding an average weight of 1.9% which helped performance.

Commodities Positioning

The 3.2% average weight in gold was a significant contributor to performance.

Changes in Portfolio

During the quarter, RBA made changes to the portfolio. RBA reduced exposure to long-duration Treasuries following their rally and reallocated proceeds into long-duration municipal bonds, where valuations appear more attractive. Municipal bonds currently offer the most compelling value within fixed income, with spreads wider than average and pre-tax yields comparable to Treasuries. As long-term rates have declined, discounted long-duration municipals now trade within the de minimis threshold, making potential price appreciation eligible for more favorable capital gains treatment.

Outlook & Positioning

As we move into the final quarter of 2025, RBA expects the investment environment to remain shaped by late-cycle dynamics and a slowing global profits cycle. Economic growth remains positive but there are clearly areas of strain, while persistent inflation pressures tied to tariffs, supply chain disruptions, and labor dynamics continue to weigh on margins. Consensus earnings expectations appear optimistic, and we believe sentiment will come under pressure as profit realities lag investor enthusiasm. Against this backdrop, we see increasing risks for cyclical growth and speculative areas of the market, and believe investors should remain disciplined in focusing on fundamentals rather than momentum.

RBA sees better opportunities in high-quality, dividend-paying, and value-oriented equities, which have historically outperformed during profit slowdowns. Our portfolios are tilted toward these exposures, with an overweight to the US and an underweight to China, where structural challenges remain. Defensive sectors such as utilities, healthcare, and consumer staples provide resilient cash flows and reliable dividends creating portfolio stability as growth decelerates. We also continue to maintain exposure to international high-quality companies, which offer comparable earnings growth to US mega-cap technology but at meaningful discounts and with higher yields. We expect leadership to broaden as investors shift away from liquidity-driven speculation and begin rewarding balance sheet strength, income, and durability.

In fixed income, RBA remains cautious. Credit spreads are historically narrow despite weakening profit trends, leaving investors poorly compensated for taking additional risk. Further, given strengthening inflation, investors may be overestimating the ability for the Fed to meaningfully reduce interest rates. As a result, our portfolios avoid corporate credit exposure, are modestly underweight duration, and maintain flexibility. Within multi-asset portfolios, we also continue to hold gold as a stabilizer against persistent uncertainty. It provides ballast at a time when both economic and geopolitical risks remain elevated.

Looking ahead, we believe fundamentals will increasingly drive market outcomes as the profits cycle matures. Late-cycle conditions tend to favor value, dividends, and international diversification rather than concentrated growth exposures, and our portfolios are positioned accordingly. By avoiding speculative excess and focusing on areas where risks are better compensated, we aim to provide consistent performance through the close of 2025 and into the coming year.

About Risk: Any investment is subject to risk. ETFs are subject to risks similar to those of stocks, such as market risk, and investors who have their funds invested in accordance with the model portfolio may experience losses. Additionally, fixed income (bond) ETFs are subject to interest rate risk, which is the risk that debt securities in a portfolio will decline in value because of increases in market interest rates. Foreign investments may be subject to greater risk than domestic investments. Investments in foreign instruments or currencies can involve greater risk and volatility than U.S. investments because of adverse market, economic, political, regulatory, geopolitical or other conditions. In emerging countries, these risks may be more significant. The value of commodities investments will generally be affected by overall market movements and factors specific to a particular industry or commodity, including weather, embargoes, tariffs, or health, political, international and regulatory developments. An imbalance in supply and demand in the income market may result in valuation uncertainties and greater volatility, less liquidity, widening credit spreads and a lack of price transparency in the market. As interest rates rise, the value of certain income investments is likely to decline. Investments in income securities may be affected by changes in the creditworthiness of the issuer and are subject to the risk of non-payment of principal and interest. The value of income securities also may decline because of real or perceived concerns about the issuer's ability to make principal and interest payments. Smaller companies are generally subject to greater price fluctuations, limited liquidity, higher transaction costs and higher investment risk than larger, established companies. Derivatives instruments can be used to take both long and short positions, be highly volatile, result in economic leverage (which can magnify losses), and involve risks in addition to the risks of the underlying instrument on which the derivative is based, such as counterparty, correlation and liquidity risk. If a counterparty is unable to honor its commitments, the value may decline and/or the portfolio could experience delays in the return of collateral or other assets held by the counterparty. Investing in an exchange-traded fund (ETF) exposes the Strategy to all of the risks of that ETF and, in general, subjects the Strategy to a pro rata portion of the Strategy's fees and expenses.
